

Leigh B. Boske

Leigh B. Boske is Associate Dean and Professor of Economics at the LBJ School. His teaching and research interests have focused on transportation policy, economics and finance. His published research has been on national and international transport policy issues, the role of transportation and logistics in international trade, and multimodal / intermodal transport planning.

Boske has served as Chief of Economic and Environmental Analysis at the Wisconsin Department of Transportation and as Senior Economist at the National Transportation Policy Study Commission of the U.S. Congress. He is currently a member of the Executive Committee of the U.S.-European Transatlantic Policy Consortium; Coordinating Committee of the Inter-American Training and Research Program for Trade Corridor Development, Organization of American States (OAS); Intermodal Freight Transportation Committee of the Transportation Research Board, National Research Council; and Advisory Committee of the Center for Transportation Research; and is Institutional Representative to the Association for Public Policy Analysis and Management.