Richard E. Feinberg is a distinguished diplomat, writer and scholar. He is currently professor of international political economy at the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies, University of California, San Diego. He also is Director of the University’s APEC (Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation) Center.

Prior to his arrival in California, Feinberg served as Special Assistant to President Clinton and Senior Director of the National Security Council’s Office of Inter-American Affairs (1993-96). As the President’s senior adviser for Latin America, Feinberg was one of the principal architects of the 1994 Summit of the Americas in Miami. His analytical memoir, Summitry in the Americas: A Progress Report, was published by the Institute for International Economics in 1997. He is the co-founder of the Leadership Council for Inter-American Summitry, a commission of distinguished citizens from around the Americas who promote implementation of the goals of the inter-American summits. He is also the founding coordinator of the APEC International Assessment Network (APIAN), a coalition of APEC Study Center leaders whose mission is to improve APEC’s performance.

Previously, Feinberg served as President of the Inter-American Dialogue and Executive Vice President of the Overseas Development Council (ODC). He has held positions on the State Department’s Policy Planning Staff and worked as an international economist in the US Treasury Department’s Office of International Affairs. He received his doctorate in economics from Stanford University and his bachelors’ degree from Brown University.

Feinberg has authored more than 150 articles and books, including The Intemperate Zone: The Third World Challenge to US Foreign Policy, and Subsidizing Success: The Export-Import Bank in the US Economy. His opinion editorials have appeared in many leading newspapers, including The New York Times, The Washington Post, Financial Times and The Los Angeles Times.
